

Monday 19th
1930.

My Darling, The first letter you will receive from your husband is to be short sharp & to the point as time does not permit it to be otherwise.

First, I love you.

Second, I can't make out an allotment to your bank as I must have the number of the account so as soon as you open it, in your married name, let me know the number. Preferably by telegram. So in the meantime as it has to be paid somewhere I had to make it payable at Guildford P.O. because I can't have it paid at the G.P.O. I have allotted £25 a fortnight. I was going to allot more but as there is the engagement ring, wedding, honeymoon & the things I am going to buy you up north I thought I had better leave it as it is. Darling go right ahead at any time and use any of that money for anything you want, except of course for the case of gun about which I warned you.

Really no time for now my dearest. You have made me infinitely happy and have honoured me by becoming my wife. I will never be able to thank you enough.

Bye for now. All my fondest love.
